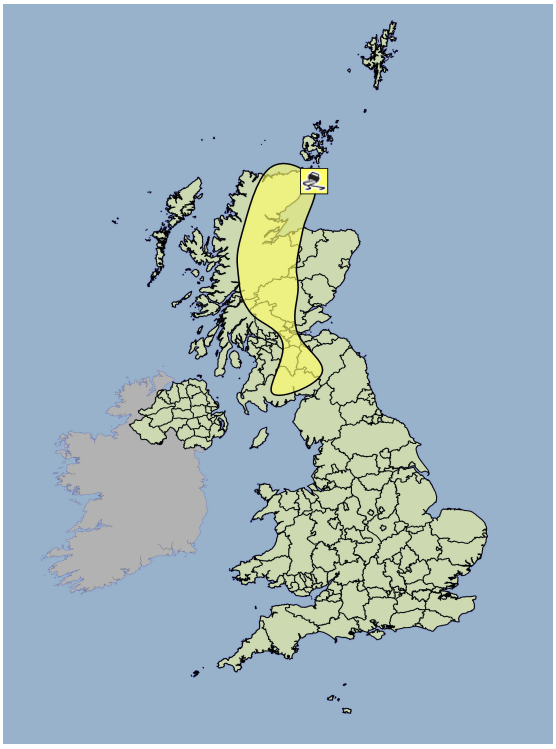
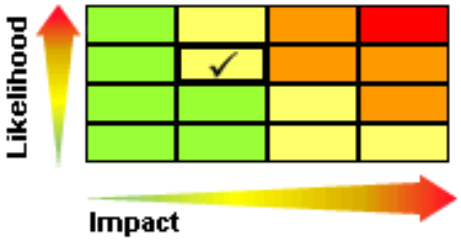
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Showers on Thursday afternoon and evening will become more isolated and clear spells will allow road temperatures to fall quickly around dusk leading to the risk of icy stretches. The showers may also allow some slight snowfalls on higher roads mainly above 300 m. Towards Friday morning temperatures will start to rise as outbreaks of rain spread form the west and this rain may be preceded by a short spell of snow on high ground.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 17:00 on Thu, 23rd Jan 2014 until 09:00 on Fri, 24th Jan 2014

As it turns colder on Thursday evening surfaces will fall below freezing allowing icy stretches to form on untreated roads, especially where they are still wet from showers. The public should be aware of the risk of some difficult driving conditions.
